

Israeli Hospital Emphasizes the Importance of Feeling ‘In Good Hands’ While Being Hospitalized

It's been about 2 months since the beginning of the Israel-Hamas war. No doubt, this changed many people's perspectives on the conflict, but not only about it directly. The current war 'blew off the dust' from a major medical treatment dilemma: Are hospitals merely places where people come to be healed? Or are they more than that? <VIP name> recent visit to the <hospital name> in <city>, Israel, might just have provided a clear answer to that question.

"Although they do sometimes have to pay for some medical services, I never saw our patients as clients. For us, medicine is much more than a business - it's a life mission," said <Hospital manager>, CEO of <hospital name>. "Therefore, we aspire not only to help people get back to their normal lives but to also make their stay at our hospital as pleasant as possible. The new emergency building we wish to utilize is a major part of this observation. However, more funding will be needed to complete this mission."

A medical team hovering around a patient (Image by wavebreakmedia\_micro on Freepik)

Visiting the wounded

<Hospital name>'s management team escorted <VIP name>'s visit to the hospital. The first part of the tour took place in the wards that contain war-injured people from all over Israel. The <VIP title> was deeply impressed with the devoted treatment given to the patients by the hospital's team. "We have dozens of wounded people hospitalized here, both from the South and North, and they keep on coming as the war goes on," said <Hospital manager> to <VIP name>.

It's still unclear how long the war will take. For this reason, the management of <hospital name> decided, immediately after the war began, to strengthen some areas in each and every ward of the hospital to make them explosive-safe. "We've already strengthened the emergency room, the delivery room, and some other wards. But there's still a lot of work left to be done," <Hospital manager> said. "We ought to thank the <fundraising organization> for helping us acquire more of the necessary funds to complete this vital project. I hope we'll have all the resources needed to complete this project in the near future."

More than just hospital wards

<Hospital name> indeed seems to be doing its best to prepare itself for the continuation of the war. "A hospital is more than a place one goes to get healed. It's a place where they should feel safe and taken care of. Building shelters in times of war is an integral part of this doctrine," <Hospital manager> mentioned to <VIP name>. "While rockets and exploding UASs are being aimed at civilian targets intentionally, we cannot ignore our duty to make our hospital the safest haven possible for our patients."

That said, the largest project <hospital name> is currently handling these days is the construction work of the to-be emergency building, set to be entirely explosive-proof and highly innovative, with top medical gear and the latest technologies. The <fundraising organization> is also set to take part in this big project and contribute to it financially, through its loyal philanthropists.

"In a reality such as the Israeli one, it's not possible to underestimate the importance of this project. We need to be ready for anything," mentioned the CEO to <VIP name>. "I hope we'll soon be able to acquire sufficient funds to complete this project for the benefit of the people of Israel."

Troubled times

Actually, the Israeli government did chip in and put millions of dollars in favor of this vital project. However, millions more are needed to complete it and cater to high-level emergency services, as in the vision of <hospital name>. "We are thankful for the aid from our American friends and donors from across the world. A bit more effort, and we'll be there," <Hospital manager> concluded.

<VIP name> told the <hospital name> team he was deeply impressed by the effort put in by them to prepare for the next stages of the war, both logistics-wise and safety-wise. He praised the hospital's crew's professional work. Hopefully, the emergency building will be completed soon and will cater the best emergency care to the locals in these troubled times.